

World Population Stripes

This map shows the world population along a latitudinal gradient. Each stripe represents the distribution of the human population and has a width of approx. 490 km at the Equator. The length of each stripe indicates the maximum latitudinal range of humans and the colors encode the main % of all population within each stripe.

